

Dear Sir or Madam:

In my opinion, the legislation to regulate spamming should provide for an opt-in arrangement, instead of an opt-out one.

Companies or people that send out unsolicited emails should include in each an opt-in option box. Those who wish to receive future emails or to be included in the mailing lists can respond by ticking the opt-in box. Those who do not wish to have anything to do with the senders can simply ignore the emails. This shall be sufficient to signify that they do not wish to receive future emails from the senders and that they want their names removed from the mailing lists.

Regards,

Phua Kok Heng
