

Dear Andrew,

I was just reading through the submissions for anti spam legislation in sg. which say very similar things & that your equivalents in other countries have said and are doing. I'll ask you the same question I ask of them. Taking that a spammer can set up a new website or routine within minutes of a country's legislators passing an anti spam law. Is there any work being done by your peers in different countries to ensure that spammers don't run rings around your hard work in passing anti spam legislation?

I take it for granted that you'll have to give me the same response that each country's legislator/regulator has given me up till now, which means nothing will change or be improved. But if Singapore just happen to be doing something that isn't just going through the motions, I'd love to hear it.

regards,
